Dairy hay prices were steady with good demand. According to the US Drought Monitor on January 20, 2022 temperatures were near normal for most of the region this week with areas of Wyoming and Montana having departures of 10-15 degrees above normal. With most of the region recording little to no precipitation for the week, most of the changes in the area were based on an assessment over the last several weeks. Improvements were made to the extreme and exceptional drought in western Montana and eastern Idaho as well as in northwest Wyoming. The next available hay report will be January 28, 2022.
